Enough, We were hand; a goal time in a St Louis gymns lead one night with the question of self declars come up to be argued by half a come different persons. Among them was a with from cincinnati, who contended that a gentleman ought always to be able to thresh a mudsil, provided the latter would make a fair scrap of it. Two or three opposed this theory, and to test it the Cincinnatian effered to strip while a committee went out to pick up a victim. It was a committee of one, and I went out upon the street and picked my man haphazard. He was going past with a bundle under his arm, and I said to him: Catarrh and "Will you come in and box a man five or six rounds for $5?" "Regular fighter?" he asked.

"No, only an amateur."
"I'm your huckleberry." He was a plasterer, and he had some of his tools in the bundle. He got ready without seeming to care who his oppo pent was to be, and as they entered the ring it was seen that they were about even in size and weight. Time was called, and the fun began. It didn't last long, however. Inside of two minutes the plasterer planted a straight right hander at the other's nose, which floored him and kept him on his back for sixty "Is that all?" calmly inquired the plas terer, as he took off the gloves. "Yes. Here's your money.

"Thanks. Good night." When the Cincinnatian came to and got his nose repaired he sat for a long ime wondering how it all came about. "Can't you explain it?" he was finally asked.

"Well, I can." "What is it?"
